What is Human Trafficking?

The Trafficking Victims Protections Act (TVPA) defines “severe forms of trafficking in persons” as:

- Sex trafficking in which a commercial sex act is induced by force, fraud, or coercion; or
- Labor trafficking: obtaining of a person for labor through the use of force, fraud, or coercion

Victims of human trafficking can be of any race/ethnicity, age or gender.

Identifying a Potential Victim

There are indicators or “red flags” to identify a victim:

- Acts anxious, fearful, or paranoid and/or avoids eye contact
- Unexplained bruises, scars, or tattoos as a form of “branding” by traffickers
- Has no form of identification (passport, immigrant visa, social security card, state ID, or vehicle license)
- Afraid of law enforcement
- Unable to leave work or residence
- Has rehearsed responses to questions
- Only seen out in public with someone else
- Being owed a debt for transport fees or other fees
- In a large group of people living in a small place
- Not in control of his/her money
- Works excessively long hours
- Unpaid or receives very little pay
- Not allowed to take breaks after working long hours

What to Do Next

If you are able to talk to him/her alone without fear of being caught, you can ask these questions:

- Can you leave your job or home when you want?
- Are you or your family being threatened?
- Are you afraid of your employer?
- Was your passport or ID taken from you upon arrival?
